LOCAL ESSAYISTS AWARDED PRIZES

The three winners in the Fire Prevention Essay contest were presented their trophies and badges in the Daly City auditorium last Monday night.

Fire Commissioners A. Schenk, E. Forsell, G. R. Augustin, J. Cosbie, and P. Selmi were masters of the evening's ceremony. G. R. Augustin was chairman of the evening.

A. J. Bodien, City Councilman and chairman of the Fire Commission, was the first speaker of the evening, being followed by Councilman Julius Twes-ten, who spoke a few appropriate words.

Mayor H. H. Smith then presented Junior Doyle, son of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Doyle, of Risel street, with the trophy which the Daly City fire department awarded the winner of the essay contest. Junior Doyle is a student in the Crocker school, and his teacher is Miss Suber, principal of the school. The prize essay was read by Mayor Smith to those assembled. Following the formal presentation of the cup by Mayor Smith, the winner said a few appropriate words of thanks.

The second prize was awarded to John Lewis, of Vista Grande school, sixth grade. The award was presented to John by Fire Chief J. J. Kennedy, who pinned it on the winner's coat. In a few well chosen words, the youthful winner expressed his thanks.

The next speaker on the program was Professor W. J. Savage, district superintendent of schools, who, following an able address, gave the honor of pinning the medal on the winner of the third prize, Miss Anieta Mooney, to Mayor Smith. Miss Mooney is a pupil of Jefferson school, Colma, and her teacher is Miss Trainor.

The children and their parents were well pleased because of the honors given them.

Much credit should be given Victor Savelly, of Company No. 5, who undertook to carry out the essay contest, and to Professor W. J. Savage, who so heartily co-operated with Mr. Savelly in this work.

TWO CARS FIGURE IN CROSSING CRASH

A Durant sedan driven by James A. Gilbert, of 2567 Folsom street, San Francisco, was struck by a San Mateo car driven by F. McManus, of 44 Fifth street, last Sunday at 4:45 P. M., at Los Olivos avenue and Mission street. The Mahket Street Railway car, No. 40, was traveling north on Mission street, and Gilbert, who was at the wheel of the Durant, was making a left hand turn into Mission street from Los Banos avenue. The Durant was struck at the right front door and fender and was driven into a Chevrolet coach which had stopped on its south-bound journey to let the Durant out of Los Banos avenue. The Chevrolet coach was driven by W. S. Lonba, of 1710 Larkin street, San Francisco. Both the Durant and the Chevrolet had to be towed to a local garage. Both cars were badly damaged, but the drivers escaped with a bad shaking up and scratches and bruises.

FATHER'S NIGHT OBSERVED BY THE CROCKER P. T. A.

On Tuesday, November 11, Crocker Parent-Teachers' Association held their first Father's night of the fall term. The President, Mrs. Julia V. Jordna, presided.

A number of fathers were present to enjoy the meeting and the excellent program arranged by Mrs. Orvilla D. Pauw, chairman.

After the business routine was concluded, Miss Norma Evans danced and sang several compositions. Mr. Roelof Pauw played two selections on the piano, and Miss Corinne Pauw and partner danced a minuet, after which all were invited to the table, which was charmingly decorated in autumn flowers and ferns. The hostesses for the evening then took charge and served delicious refreshments.

The next regular meeting will be held on December 9, at 2 P. M., in the hall on Wellington avenue. Mrs. J. R. Spann, the Seventeenth District president, will be the speaker of the day.

A membership drive is now being conducted, and the class at Crocker school securing the most members will receive a prize. All those interested in the school and Parent-Teacher work are invited to call the membership chairman, Mrs. Ethel Bolger, Randolph 5386, or the president, Mrs. Julia V. Jordna, Randolph 6427, and they will gladly call and explain the work and aims of the Parent-Teachers' movement.

LEGION PLANS TO AID UNEMPLOYED

Mobilizing the forces of the American Legion in California in the campaign to end unemployment, State Commander B. W. Gearhart of Fresno, head of the veterans' organization, has announced steps to join the nation-wide effort to meet the problem now confronting the nation. Commander Gearhart has enlisted the support of approximately 400 Posts of his organization in this state. In a statement, Commander Gearhart says:

"Our country is in the throes of an unemployment situation, which challenges the American Legion to give the same loyalty and support which the Legion gave in a similar emergency in 1921 and 1922.

"The 881,000 members of our organization throughout the nation are men of stability in their own communities, or they would not be in the Legion. This is evidenced by the fact that in 1929-1930, when the lack of employment was fully felt, our organization increased its membership to the highest point in its history. Therefore, we can reasonably assume that a majority of Legionnaires have standing, and influence, in the business and industrial world.

"May I ask that you transmit to every Legionnaire in your department my earnest request that every effort be made to provide work for their comrades less fortunate than themselves. No man, who served the colors in war, will ask for charity. He will accept a job from a comrade, however, and be grateful for the chance to make his own living, just as he shared the hardships and sometimes the food and cigarettes of his comrades in the war zones.

"What a magnificent thing it would be if every member of the Legion would accept the individual obligation of finding, in some manner, at least one job for an idle comrade. Nearly one million men put to work, nearly half of those abnormally out of work in the country at this time, according to latest available estimates of President Hoover could easily turn the tide of unemployment back to a revival of good times."

CATHOLIC DAUGHTERS HOLD THEIR INITIATION

Last Sunday afternoon Court St. Mary No. 1155, Catholic Daughters of America, held their initiation in the Masonic Hall, with Golden Gate Court No. 913, of San Francisco, exemplifying the initiatory work.

A large crowd from the various Courts throughout the Bay region were present to witness this ceremony, as well as many of the Grand Officers and representatives of the National Court. A class of thirty candidates received the first and second degree of the order.

Court St. Mary No. 1155 was highly complimented on the good work done by the members in succeeding in bringing in so many new candidates. This Court was organized in July, and it has now doubled its membership.

After the initiatory services a supper was served to all the members, guests and clergy, including the officers of the Knights of Columbus. Among the clergy were Rev. Fathers John J. Cullen, State Chaplain, Joseph Farrell, of Portland, Oregon, and James Donohoe, Chaplain of Court St. Mary.

HENRY C. FINKLE ENDS LIFE ON REDWOOD CITY ESTATE

Henry C. Finkle, for fifty-two years secretary of the California State Supreme Court, fired a bullet through his heart on his estate west of Redwood City shortly before noon last Monday, in the presence of two friends. Finkle had been brooding over the death of his wife three years ago, according to friends, and recently had the hallucination that he had enemies who were going to ruin him.

Accompanied by John Lang, deputy coroner of San Mateo, and Walter Hilton, jeweler, the veteran secretary went for a walk west of Redwood City. Without a word, Finkle stepped away from his friends and went behind a barn on his property, where he fired a bullet through his heart.

GRIM REAPER CLAIMS FORMER RESIDENT ON ARMISTICE DAY

The many friends of Joseph H. Wickstrom, who lived on Hanover street for many years, will be shocked to hear that he passed away on Armistice day at Runnymede, Palo Alto. Mr. Wickstrom left a beloved wife, Julia E. Wickstrom, and a son, Edwin J., and a daughter, Ruth E. Wickstrom, to mourn his loss. Mr. Wickstrom was a native of Sweden, aged 54 years. Services were held Friday, November 14, at 10:30 A. M., from the chapel of Roller and Hapgood, Palo Alto.

BASEBALL GAMES ARE POSTPONED

Old Jupiter Pluvus made his appearance over the week end, preventing several important Spalding league contests. All of the previously scheduled games in the American division, Daly City vs. Mission Reds, Olympic Florists vs. Napa Sodas, and O'Brien, Sportorno & Mitchell vs. Glen Park, will be played next Sunday instead.

The leaders of the American division, Olympic Florists and Napa Soda Thirties, tangle in the feature game. This battle for top position will be played on Jackson diamond, starting at 2 o'clock. Daly City will oppose the Mission Reds on Clubhouse diamond at 12:30.

The standing of the clubs after five weeks of play is as follows:

	W.	L.	Pct.
Olympic Florists	4	0	1.000
Napa Sodas	4	1	.800
Mission Reds	2	2	.500
O'Brien, S. & M.	1	1	.500
Daly City	1	3	.250
Glen Park	0	5	.000

The O'Brien, Sportorno & Mitchell nine is credited with only two games played. That means that they will have to play the other three after the league season is finished.

At a special meeting of the league directors Monday night the Daly City O'Brien, Sportorno & Mitchell game was ordered replayed. A tie game between the O'Brien nine and the Olympic Florists will be the Poultrymen's second replayed game, and a postponed contest with the Mission Reds accounts for the other.

VETERANS ASKED TO AID RED CROSS

World War veterans of California have been summoned to the colors for the annual roll call of the American National Red Cross by State Commander B. W. Gearhart of the American Legion. In directions to the three hundred and ninety-seven Posts of his organization, Commander Gearhart points out that the period from Armistice day until November 27 has been designated for the Red Cross Roll Call, and he requests every veteran to join up. Commander Gearhart says:

"The American Legion has been active in its support of the Red Cross call to membership, and, in order that this spirit of helpful co-operation may be continued and expanded, I appeal to you to bring immediately to the attention of every Legionnaire in our department the importance of rallying to this year's Roll Call. I know every Legionnaire, wherever possible, will avail himself of the opportunity to wear the insignia denoting that he has responded to this worthy cause.

"This year, more than ever before, the need is great for a large Red Cross membership, and I hope the Legionnaires within our department will co-operate to make this campaign highly successful."

ENTERTAINS AT LUNCHEON AND THEATRE PARTY

On Saturday, November 15, Guinevere Callsen, 407 Santa Barbara avenue, entertained fifteen of her playmates at a luncheon and theatre party, the occasion being her ninth birthday. The children came early, bringing many gifts. At 12:30 lunch was served. The table was beautifully decorated in pink and green. After lunch the children played games until show time. Mrs. Callsen, mother of the little hostess, was assisted by Mrs. H. Fellows. All returned home tired but happy, wishing Guinevere many more such happy days.

IMPROVEMENT OF HIGHWAY SOUGHT

Appearing before the San Mateo county board of supervisors, is session at Redwood City last Monday, Fred Drake, president of the San Mateo County Chamber of Commerce, asked for the construction of a mile of highway to connect the Skyline boulevard with Canada road in the south end of the county.

Mr. Drake told the board that the lack of a highway in this section was seriously retarding development. In addition to the new highway, the Chamber of Commerce head asked that two dangerous curves in the Canada road near Woodside be eliminated. He characterized these curves as extremely hazardous to traffic and said that they were a constant menace.

Should the board of supervisors approve the Chamber of Commerce plan the county would be given a new connecting link with San Francisco and Stanford University. In addition, Mr. Drake pointed out, the new road, which will run just west of the Woodside and Portola sections to home-seekers. He said that the section is now suffering seriously from the lack of just such a connecting link with main arteries.

The supervisors took the matter under advisement and requested Supervisor John Poole, in whose district the new highway would be located, to investigate the proposal and report to the board.

Attorney Arthur Reddington appeared before the board and asked that the boundaries of Emerald Lake fire district be changed so as to eliminate certain properties now included. The board set December 1 as the time for hearing on the proposed elimination.

Surveyor Manuel Francis, Half Moon Bay, reported that his community had voted in favor of a tax to be levied for police protection. The plan to create a police district was delayed until the December 1 meeting, when complete plans will be formulated. The vote in favor of the district was 136 to 32. Ballots were submitted to County Clerk Elizabeth M. Kneese, who will examine them and report at the next session.

Col. W. Scott, Menlo Heights, appeared before the board and asked that the county take over a street in Menlo Heights and provide for its paving. The request was tabled.

With the conclusion of routine business the board adjourned to meet Monday, December 1.

FORMER DALY CITY SCHOOL GIRL DIES AT BURLINGAME

The Lasswell & Co. mortuary chapel was the location of the funeral of Ethel Louise, daughter of John and Violet Harris and sister of Dorothy and Florence Harris, of 1429 Balboa, Burlingame. The very large number present was a fitting manifestation of the love and esteem with which the little girl was regarded by friends in Daly City and Burlingame.

Ethel Louise was born in Daly City, October 27, 1915, and was a dearly loved pupil of the Daly City schools until she was 10 years of age, when her parents moved to Burlingame, and in the schools there she continued successfully in her studies and was to have graduated next month, an event that she looked forward to with sublime pride.

Her principal, her teacher, and her classmates, all cast down with sincere sorrow, were present at her funeral. Six boys of her class were her pallbearers.

INJURED DEPUTY SHERIFFS ON THE ROAD TO RECOVERY

Deputy Sheriff Tom Maloney and Jail Matron Dolly Grainger, both injured in automobile accidents on November 8, have returned to their homes in Redwood City. Deputy Sheriff C. A. Callaghan is still confined to the South San Francisco hospital, suffering from injuries sustained at the same time.

Deputy Sheriff Joseph Meeks, the most seriously injured of the four, is reported to be recovering in the Petaluma hospital, and it is thought will be there for several weeks.

OFFICERS DISCOVER STILL BUT FAIL TO FIND OWNER

A still was recently found in operation within the limits of our city, in the Howard residence, on Wellington avenue. The prohibition officers were aided in this work by Chief of Police Doyle. The still was discovered while still warm, last Saturday afternoon, with 25,000 gallons of mash. The still was of 350 gallon type. No one was found on the premises.

TANFORAN RACES DRAW BIG CROWDS

Western turfmen will come into their own Saturday when the Pacific Coast Breeders' Association will put on a $5,000 handicap for horses bred in California and Nevada as a part of the gala week end feature program at Tanforan in San Bruno. Only horses bred in these two states will be eligible to compete, but judging from the entries the race will be a classic.

The $5,000 purse, and it may be more, will be the first of the major stakes offered at the twenty-five day meeting being held at Tanforan under the breeders association's auspices. Every horse entered for the race, and there are thirty, will be a Western product and owned by a member of the association. The handicap promises to be one of the most thrilling ever held on the coast, and some of the finest horses in America will answer the bugle.

Top weight in the race went to Don Alvaro, owned by the A. A. Baroni stable. This horse created a name for himself back in Chicago this season and is reported to be in a fine condition now. He has been picked by followers of the turf as a likely winner.

Second weight goes to Warlight, son of War Cry, and owned by Mrs. Ted Horning of Pleasanton. He did some remarkable things at the recent Del Monte meeting and will be in front as a menace to any favorite.

DeSwasey, prize mount from the J. W. Marchbank Heather stables, will be another candidate, and from his performance last Saturday will make an interesting contender. Peter B. Kyne's Bonfield, who did some good track work in Chicago, promises to be among the leaders or they slip under the barrier in the handicap Saturday.

These four entries have a lot of followers, but the entire list of nominations for the handicap includes some noble runners, any of which may pull the upset. Many things will enter into the consideration of likely winners. Last Saturday the track was wet and sticky; this week indications are that it will be well dried out and very fast.

Here are the nominations for the big event: Norman Count, Don Alvaro, Mi Concha, Charming Homme, Bonfield, Kamalii, Golden Gift, Lady Conrad, George Conrad, Sun B, Sam Ischer, Sam Clemente, Koukini, Kauka, Bon Dots, Bon Chick, Warlight, Miss Joan, Gabbo, Marynede, Bright Hopes, DeSwasey, Oaten, Annie D, Blanche Brooks, Miss Sage, Bon Moon, Umpire, Aub, Forty Niner, Wikiup Lassie.

It is expected that more than 15,000 persons will gather at Tanforan Saturday for the feature program. In spite of the bad weather more than half that number attended last Saturday's inaugural.

The program this week is especially dedicated to the $10,000,000 breeding industry in California and Nevada. The handicap is stressed because Tanforan is supplying an outlet for Western track talent in the West, giving Western breeders a chance to show their thoroughbreds without going East.

Ample parking facilities are available at the big San Bruno arena, and special police are facilitating traffic movement so that there are no delays or congestion.

Post time is 1:45, and the option system will prevail.

CELEBRATES FIFTH BIRTHDAY

Little Jacqueline Lecari, 5-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Lecari, of Risel street, entertained a group of her small playmates and relatives at a party given in honor of her birthday, Saturday, November 8. The home was very tastefully decorated, the color scheme being carried out in pink and blue. A fancy basket of flowers with pink and blue streamers brought from the chandeliers was the table centerpiece. The favors were pink and blue. The honored guest received many lovely gifts from her little friends. A very pleasant afternoon of indoor games was spent and delicious refreshments were enjoyed by the following guests: Buddy Dempsey, Sonny Dempsey, Edward Silver, Ruth Steele, Dolores Steele, Helen Campbell, Bobby Crocker, Billy Redding, Helen Redding, Florence Poenter, Lorraine Lecari, Evelyn Lecari, Jacqueline Lecari.

"DOES GOD HEAR?" SECOND OF SERIES

The second sermon on the topic, "Does God Hear?" will be delivered in Grace Presbyterian church Sunday evening at 7:45. It was Thomas Carlyle who said, "All men pray!" At any rate, this subject of perennial interest will be again discussed.

STATE BUILDING FIRE PROTECTION FORCE

Eleven years ago the state of California began to build up its fire protection organization, starting with four men.

This year it had one of the greatest field forces of any state in the country, numbering 178.

This is recalled by State Forester M. B. Pratt, who will soon have served thirteen years in California's state forestry service.

When the plan of county and federal co-operation with the state began in 1922, Pratt recalled, a total of $77,250 was available.

Gradually the appropriations for protecting the state's priceless timber and watershed resources from destruction has been increased until today, with aid of the federal government and counties, $612,715 has been made available for forestry purposes.

California's first state board of forestry was created following a legislative commission's report in 1885 and 1886.

In addition to California's field force of 178 this year, the state also operated a state nursery at Davis, employing from six to eight men. This is principally used in raising trees for use of state institutions, although a certain amount of stock is raised for use of farmers.

"At the present time, virtually all the area valuable for forest and watershed purposes outside the National forests is being protected in California, as well as a large area of grass and grain land," says Pratt.

"The total area protected is estimated about thirty million acres, of which about eighteen million acres is classified as timber and watershed area. It is estimated that 82 per cent of all prevention expenditures made by the state are for the protection of such areas.

State expenditures for forestry purposes for the present year are estimated as follows:

1. State appropriation for fire prevention and state nursery, $205,000.
2. State allotment for fire suppression, $120,000.
3. Clarke-McNary (federal government) allotment, $147,715.
4. County co-operative funds under direct supervision of state, $140,000.

DEATH VALLEY OFFERS UNUSUAL MOTOR TRIP

With the approach of the winter season, motorists who fancy the unusual in touring are making their way into the far-flung deserts of the southwest, it is noted by the touring bureau of the California State Automobile Association. With highways completely signed and cool nights in prospect, the invasion this season promises to break previous records.

Motor tourists will discover that their needs have been anticipated even in the most remote places. Death Valley, probably aptly named years ago, no longer presents the forbidding aspect that gave it its name. It now boasts of modern hotel accommodations and improved desert type roads throughout its 175 miles of length and 25 miles width.

Points of historic and scenic interest in the Death Valley region are numerous and considerable time can be spent in seeing them. In the valley proper there are sand dunes, Grotto Canyon, the remains of the old Harmony Borax Mill, Golden Canyon, Mushroom Rock, Pluto's Salt Pools, Bad Water, Salt Beds, the remains of the old Eagle Borax Works, Ashford Mill and old Confidence Mill. Outside of the valley proper, there are Dante's View in the Black Mountains, where at an elevation of approximately 5,400 feet a marvelous panorama of Death Valley is obtained; Gower Gulch, Zabriskie Point, Twenty Mule Canyon, Corkscrew Canyon, Mt. Blanco, Ryan, Death Valley Junction, Shoshone, Beatty, Rhyolite, the "ghost city," "Death Valley" Scotty's home west of Beatty, and many deserted mining towns.

Two of the principal routes taken by motorists into Death Valley are by way of Bakersfield, Little Lake, Olancho, and Darwin, and by way of Barstow, Daggett, Baker, Silver Lake, Ibex Pass, Shoshone, and Dante's View or Death Valley Junction.

The Automobile Association touring bureau advises motorists who plan to camp not to do so in dry washes, due to the possibility of cloudbursts, and check up on gas, water, oil, and other necessary supplies in order to avoid any chance of running out between points.

NO WORDS FOR SOS

Many arguments have been indulged in as to the words for which the distress signal SOS stand. Some have thought they stood for "Save Our Ship," "Save Our Souls," or other similar sentences.

According to the Navy Department the letters are not abbreviations at all, being merely an arbitrary signal selected because of the simplicity of making and understanding it in dot-and-dash code.

In this code S is made by three dots, O by three dashes, so the signal SOS is expressed by three dots, three dashes and three dots.

Prior to 1912 the radio distress signal was CQD, which some said stood for "Come Quick; Distress." Whether this supposition is correct or not, that's the idea it sought to convey.

The world's laziest bootlegger is believed to have been found in a small shack near Newark, N. J., as the apparatus was so arranged that every operation from brewing to bottling could be done while the operator reclined on a bed.

The Federal Trade Commission might investigate the fraudulent advertising in political platforms.

An optimist is one who believes the next Congress will do better.

ADOPTING UNIFORM TRAFFIC ORDINANCE

Approximately 800 towns and cities in the United States have adopted the model municipal traffic ordinance since its preparation by the National Conference on Street and Highway Safety a few years ago. A report to the California State Automobile Association, which contributed largely to the drafting of the ordinance, states that these communities adopted the measure in its entirety, or in substantial part. Three states, New Jersey, New York and Wisconsin, have written its provisions into their state laws, with the effect of providing uniformity in municipal traffic regulations by state enactment.

While intensive efforts are constantly being made toward further adoption of this measure, conflicting rules are still to be found in driving through towns and cities on long trips. The report to the Automobile Association shows that complex systems of signals, complicated rules and hasty attempts at control are still in operation in many communities and often contrary in application and effect to the regulations employed in nearby towns and cities.

This situation is especially true in eastern sections, it is said. A perusal of local ordinances in effect on the route between the states of Washington and New York for instance, has revealed that the Washington driver would incur the danger of arrest, fine and imprisonment 289 times if he adhered to his home city's traffic rules throughout his journey. In addition, he would meet the hazard of accident, injury and possibly death.

ALL IN THE DAY'S WORK

Billy was naughty and his mother told him as soon as he had finished his dinner he would be punished. During the meal his little pal came for him play.

"All right," said Billy; "I just have to finish my pie, get my lickin', then I can go."—Liberty Magazine.

REAL PROGRESS

Today the American citizen, sitting in his home or office, can in a few minutes and at a reasonable cost, be connected by telephone with a person in any one of twenty-nine foreign countries. We have contacts with 87 per cent of all telephones in existence, and trans-Atlantic telephony increased from 2,500 calls in 1927, to 19,000 in 1929. America's great, privately-owned telephone industry is doing an invaluable work in bringing the peoples of the world closer together.

Observance of all the health rules would probably cause us to live longer than we could afford.

The Fighting Tenderfoot

THE STORY

Garrett O'Hara, young lawyer, on his way to practice at Concho, wild western town, is shot at from ambush by Shep Sanderson, who mistakes him for Judge Warner, whom certain cattle interests wish to prevent holding court. Barbara Steelman, who thought the shot was directed at her, warns Garrett not to go to Concho because of the big cattle war. In town Sanderson picks a fight with Garrett and is getting the worst of it when Ingram, cattle baron, interrupts. Steve Worrall tells Garrett about the cattle war between Ingram and Steelman, father of Barbara. Garrett tells Ingram he desires to remain neutral, but the latter declares there can be no neutrality. Bob Quantrell, young killer for Ingram, saves Garrett and an Englishman, Smith-Beresford, from being shot by Sanderson. The three become friends. Garrett accidentally witnesses a meeting between Barbara and Ingram. They are lovers. Garrett and the Englishman buy a ranch with Steelman as silent partner. Fitch, Steelman man, kills an Ingram follower. A posse starts in pursuit and Fitch stops at the "tenderfoot ranch." The posse, including Quantrell and Sanderson, capture and hang Fitch. Sanderson starts a fight at the ranch and Garrett and the Englishman are wounded. Ingram and Barbara appear and put an end to the fight. Quantrell changes sides and joins with the two "tenderfeet."

CHAPTER V—Continued

With a glance of careless contempt Ingram's eyes swept the room. "Well, I told you what would happen if you stayed in this country," he said to O'Hara.

"Did you tell him what would happen to three or four of your killers when they tried to murder him?" Barbara asked, her eyes flashing indignation.

Ingram looked at her with an expressionless face. "Are you in this, girl?"

"Yes, I'm in it. They're my father's friends. Your hired men shot them for no cause." She stood straight and slender, quivering with indignation at the man whom she held responsible, with sympathy for the two victims of the outrage.

"Tried to obstruct a posse in performance of its duty. If they got hurt, don't blame me. They carried arms in defense of a criminal wanted by the law."

"I don't believe it—and what's more you don't, either, Dave Ingram. Would two young tenderfoots attack a dozen armed ruffians? It's not reasonable. That scrawny Shep Sanderson an' his friends started it."

"They got excited when these scoundrels here shot up three-four of them. Who wouldn't? Why, it's common report that both these men here have been practicing with guns ever since they came into the country. They were spoiling for a fight. Dangerous killers like they are ought not to be allowed loose on a decent community."

Barbara read the faintest flicker of ironic mirth in Ingram's eyes. "You don't believe a word of what you're saying," she flung hotly at him. "I'm not going to argue with you. What do you want here? Why have you come? I've got to get help to look after these wounded men. But I can't leave them like this."

"I've sent to town for both doctors. One of 'em can come here. Even criminals are entitled to medical attention. I'll look after them till he comes. Bring me fresh water from the spring."

Ingram rolled up the sleeves of his shirt and washed his hands before he approached Smith-Beresford. With his pocket knife he cut the shirt and undershirt from around the wound, then bathed it, using the cold water Barbara had brought from the spring.

"I'm afraid he's awfully sick," Barbara murmured, her troubled eyes on the delirious patient.

Ingram turned to Garrett. "How about you, young fellow? Get yore coat off an' let's see where we're at."

Barbara helped the lawyer remove the coat.

The cattle man washed and examined the wound.

"Pain much?"

"I'm noticing it."

"Thought so. Bullet hit the bone likely. You're lucky it's no worse. From what the boys tell me a lot of good lead was wasted. If anyone had told me that Quantrell an' Deever an' Sanderson an' a whole passle more of willin' lads would have cut down on you with their hoglegs with nothing to show for it but one ornerly lil' flesh wound I'd 'a' said it was a story that listened fine an' for some one to tell a better one."

"They nearly murdered my friend, if not quite," O'Hara said bitterly, in a low voice. "Isn't that enough to give you a little satisfaction?"

"Young fellow, if you know what's good for you don't insinuate that they did it by my orders," Ingram answered harshly. Then, curly, "Fix me up a pad for this, Barbara. We'll not monkey with the lead pill Doc comes."

A shadow from the doorway fell across the sunlit floor. Ingram looked up quickly and as he did so his hand slid toward his right hip and rested there. Bob Quantrell leaned negligently against the jamb.

"Come to see how yore sick friends are gettin' along, Bob?" the owner of the Diamond Tail brand asked ironically, his steady eyes on those of the young desperado. "I suppose, in a way of speakin', you might call them yore patients."

"No, sir. I reckon not. The hand began to play before I got here. Credit Shep with the job. Does he get another notch on his gun?"

"Too early to tell yet. The only notch up to date goes to innocent Mr. O'Hara."

Quantrell laughed, slowly and insolently. "He sure tamed a bunch of wild wolves so's they was willin' to eat out of his hand. My hat off to you, Mr. O'Hara. You're a sure enough wolf tamer."

"You ought to be gratified, O'Hara. This is praise from an expert," Ingram said grimly.

"What do you want here?" Barbara demanded. "Why have you come?"

Quantrell swept the sombrero from his head. "Don't you worry, miss. I'm through with that bunch of wolves. I'll throw in with yore paw if he needs a top hand."

"Why? You fought these men. Half an hour ago you were tryin' to kill them."

"All in the way of business. Fact is, I like the way they called the turn on Shep's crowd. They've got sand in their craws, these two birds. A man can swap bosses, can't he?"

Ingram made comment. "I'll be glad to write to yore father, Barbara, recommendin' Quantrell's faithful services," he said.

The young killer's pale blue eyes rested on the cattle man. He understood the spirit of the remark though it was not obviously ironical.

"Meanin' anything in particular, Mr. Ingram?" he asked, very gently.

The older man was not afraid of him. Ingram's courage had been tried and never found wanting. It took nerve to rule the lawless bunch of which he was leader. But, on the other hand, he could see no profit in a duel with this cold machine-like vehicle of death. It would not be an even match, since he considered his life far more valuable than that of Quantrell.

He smiled. "Let it ride as it lays, Bob. Like you say, a man can change his boss. No law against that. Since we're here we better make ourselves useful. I've sent for a doc. Till he shows up I'm subbin' for him. Take a look at yore patient's shoulder here. Nice clean flesh wound, wouldn't you say? Ought to heal in no time."

Quantrell looked at the wound. "Seems like it ought. Not my patient, Ingram. Shep gets the credit, like I done told you."

"So you did. I forgot. Well, the main thing is that he'll be rollin' his tail high as ever right soon."

"Shep ain't what I'd call a top hand at his trade," Quantrell drawled. "That's twice now he hasn't cut it. He don't live up to his rep. I can't see how he reads his title clear to call himself a bad man from the Panhandle. If I was his boss I'd read him the riot act."

"I'll take yore advice," Ingram said. "That bandage pad ready yet, Barbara?"

They busied themselves over the wounded man.

The sound of horses' hoofs came drumming down the wind. Barbara stepped to the door.

She spoke quietly, as though what she was mentioning had no special significance. "Father's here."

Neither Ingram nor Quantrell made any comment. They were tying a

"I'm Not Going to Argue With You."

strip of linen around O'Hara's shoulder to hold the bandage in place and they continued to work on this. But both of them shifted positions in such a way as to face the door.

The galloping horses pulled up. A voice asked sharply, "The boys hurt, Barb?"

Barbara spoke quickly. "Mr. Ingram is lookin' after them."

Wesley Steelman pushed past her and stood in the doorway. He glanced at Ingram and in a voice hoarse with anger demanded, "Who did that?" His finger was pointing toward the body swaying in the wind.

Hard-eyed, Ingram met his furious gaze. "I wasn't here myself. A sheriff's posse, I'm told."

"Hired killers," Steelman corrected. "By G—d, some one will pay for this." His eyes swept the room and rested first on Smith-Beresford then on O'Hara. Of the latter he asked a question: "Both of you shot?"

"Both of us," Garrett answered, a gleam of wintry humor in his eyes. "I'm a botched job, but poor Lyulph is hit in the chest. Afraid he'll have a hard time of it."

"Who did it?"

"Sanderson and his friends. After we had been shot we backed into the house and stood them off."

Bob Quantrell laughed. "Not the way I noticed it. You picked the belt earl up an' carried him in. You stood us off by yore lone. Never saw the beat of it. One tenderfoot, some shot up at that. A dozen gunmen on the prod. An' by crapes! he stood us off two-three hours. He's sure the most eat-'em-alive pilgrim ever drifted into the San Marcos."

"I notice you're not worried about the health of any of the posse, Steelman," the leader of the other faction jeered. "But just so you'll get the record straight I'll tell you that yore young pardner here killed Brad Sowers, shot up Pankey so bad he won't live, probably, an' wounded two other members of the posse. All this whilst he was resistin' arrest, you understand."

"Resistin' arrest what for?"

"For aidin' an' abettin' the escape of a murderer wanted by the law."

"That's the way you wrap it up. Different here. Tom Fitch was murdered in cold blood. As for O'Hara here, I'm with him till the cows come home. If he did all you claim he did he's the best fightin' man on the San Marcos an' I'll be proud to ride the river alongside of him."

"Here, too," chimed in Quantrell.

"Bob is thinkin' of takin' you on for a boss, Steelman," Ingram drawled. "Glad to give him a recommend."

"I can speak for myself, Ingram," the boy said. "Far as that goes I don't reckon yore recommend would help me much with Mr. Steelman."

"Not none," Steelman spoke with emphasis. "An' comin' down to recommendations, Ingram, I'll make one right now. Get out. Hit the trail. Or my boys might follow the example you've set an' do some hangin' their own selves."

Coolly Ingram looked around. Steve Worrall had come into the room, and at his heels were Texas Jim and young Curt Steelman.

Worrall spoke up. "Mr. Steelman does not mean quite that, Dave. Still an' all, that's good medicine about takin' the road while it's open."

"Good of you to have my interests at heart, Steve," the cattle man jeered. "I'll go when I'm ready to go an' there won't be any hangin', either."

"Not while I can fan a gun," Quantrell added. "We've come to different forks of the road, me an' Mr. Ingram. But I don't reckon anyone better get on the prod yet, not about today's ruckus. He wasn't here during the trouble an' when he came he stayed to fix up these boys."

"Well, he's fixed 'em up," Steelman replied roughly. "After his hired men shot 'em. Nothin' more to stay for. I'm part owner here, an' I say he goes."

Barbara spoke in a low voice to Ingram. "I think you'd better go."

Ingram smiled hardly at her. "I'm comin' to that same notion myself. Looks like I'm being handed my hat. Adios, Miss Steelman. So long, Wes. See you later."

The boss of the Diamond Tail sauntered to the door, spurs jingling as he moved. He passed through the group of cowboys as though they had not been there, superbly indifferent to them. When he reached his horse he swung to the saddle and rode leisurely away beside the man he had left with the two animals.

A hundred yards up the trail he met Doctor Holloway.

"Did Doc Manley go to my ranch?" Ingram asked.

"Yes, sir. I understand some one has been hurt here, too."

"Two wounded men, one of 'em shot up pretty badly."

The doctor looked down and saw some men carrying a body on a door.

"That one of them?" he asked.

"Not that one," Ingram's sardonic smile flickered for a moment. "You can't do a thing for him. There was a necktie party, an' that fellow was the hangee, as you might say."

Doctor Holloway was a fat, jolly little man with a red face. He looked quickly at the cattle man, started to speak, and thought better of it.

"Expect I'd better be gettin' along to my patients," he said. "Who are they?"

"Couple of pardners of Wes Steelman—the belted earl an' that pilgrim O'Hara."

Holloway was a born gossip. He itched to know just what had taken place, but Dave Ingram was not the man upon whom to push home his curiosity.

"Well, I guess I'd better drift on down," he said.

"Do," the cattle man agreed. "An' when you're through ride over to the ranch. Doc Manley may need some help. We've got quite a hospital there, too."

As the doctor descended toward the cabin his mind ranged over the situation. This was only the beginning, the first battle of a war. There would be lively times on the San Marcos.

CHAPTER VI

A Trip to Town

After the battle at the Cress ranch there was a lull in the Jefferson County war, as the conflict between the Ingram and the Steelman forces came to be called in later days. It was as though both sides were waiting to get their breath again. The less dangerously wounded men were afoot within a week. Pankey and Smith-Beresford hung for a few days between life and death, then very slowly began to mend, edging away from the gulf into which they had almost been plunged.

Meanwhile talk swept the countryside as a fire does a dry prairie. There were some amazing aspects about the Cress ranch battle. Old-timers found the facts hard to reconcile. That O'Hara had stood up to the blazing guns of Sanderson, Sowers, Deever, and others, had driven these notorious gunmen back out of range, and later had fought off the entire posse for hours could be classed only as a miracle, but a miracle, made possible by the coolness, the courage, and the accurate fire of the tenderfoot. In a community where gameness was a matter of course, the one essential quality of anyone not a weakling, Garrett O'Hara had become set apart as one who had fought his way to fame.

The defection of Bob Quantrell from the Ingram faction was another detail that received much comment. Few knew that the callous young desperado had liked Smith-Beresford from the first, that he admired the courage of both Smith-Beresford and his partner O'Hara, and that he had signed up with them as a rider in order to protect them as well as he could.

"A queer bird, young Quantrell. Eh, what, Garrett?" the Englishman said to his partner one day as he sat in the pleasant sunshine in front of the cabin.

His eyes were on the young desperado, who was sitting in front of the bunk house whittling out of wood a horse for little Bennie Ford. Bennie was the five-year-old son of Mary Joe Ford, a young widow who had come to do the cooking at the ranch. He was a favorite of Bob Quantrell's and ordered the boy-gunner about with implicit confidence.

Garrett shook his head. "Too much for me. There he sits, gay and good-natured and full of the milk of human kindness. You feel he is utterly dependable and loyal. I'd trust him in any crisis or with any amount of money. I got to thinking of him as just a nice boy—and then that gory record of his jumps to my mind, cold-blooded and deliberate killings done without mercy or apparent remorse."

"By Jove, you know, sometimes I rub my eyes and wonder if it isn't just a badly dream."

"It's real enough, old chap. I dare say you know that when you feel your wound. Better not stay out too long and get tired. I'll trot along and see how they're getting along with the house."

"Don't let Matson cut down the size of the fireplace, Old Top. His notion is all bally rot, but he's a stubborn mule."

The Circle S O ranch, as the Cress place was now called, had become a hive of industry. Cattle in large bunches had been shifted to the contiguous range and had to be worked. At all hours of the day and night cowboys drifted to and from the ranch. Just now half a dozen carpenters, imported from Aurora, were camped in the pasture. They had been engaged to build a new house.

The Lodge, as Smith-Beresford called it, was to be a commodious structure, rustic in type. The hewn-log walls were already up and the roof on. One of the chief features was to be a large open hall with an immense stone fireplace at one end. This hall extended to the roof, but a stairway wound to a second-floor gallery

Museum Gets Relic of Days of Ancient Rome

The British museum has acquired a fine relic of the days when England was garrisoned by the Romans—a discharge certificate issued to a Roman auxiliary soldier—over 1,800 years ago.

This man, Gemellus the Pannonian, was serving in this country in A. D. 122—the year in which Emperor Hadrian crossed the channel to inspect the great wall which bears his name.

Only about 100 of these diplomas of discharge are known to exist, and seven alone have been found relating to soldiers who were stationed in Britain.

This new acquisition, in a wonderful state of preservation despite its 1,800 years of existence, is far finer than the few others in the Bloomsbury collection.

It was found at Oszony (the Roman Brigetii), in Hungary, Gemellus having

Forest's Place in Nature

It would seem that eventually the world must come back to a second and permanent age of wood for fuel, almost all construction materials, and many other uses. The forest is the only resource that may be consumed extensively yet not exhausted and it is the only material that can take the place of coal, oil and iron.—Exchange.

which extended around three sides of the hall. From this gallery opened the sleeping rooms. Rough slabs and logs had been used instead of sawn lumber wherever possible. In time the Englishman expected to decorate the walls with big game heads, trophies of the chase to be brought down by himself and his partner. He had come to the West to enjoy himself. If he could make money at the same time that was all to the good, but he did not intend to take business too seriously.

O'Hara passed the bunk house and stopped a moment. "Did Mr. Steelman say anything about that bunch of Bar B Y cows?" he asked Quantrell.

"Said he'd buy at a whack up if he could, but he wouldn't pay any big price. It's a sorry herd, cutbacks most of 'em. The Old Man said he wouldn't look at 'em twice if they weren't here already clutterin' up the range. At that, there's some good cows wearin' the Bar B Y. Kinda uneven, scrubs an' nice stock mixed. You'd be buyin' a bone yard to start with, but they'll take on flesh if they're put on a good range."

"More trouble than they're worth, I'd think."

"Maybeso," Quantrell showed his prominent teeth in a grin. "Up to you an' the Old Man. I ain't paid to do the buyin'. My forty per comes to me for forkin' brones an' being an alleged top hand with cows."

Quantrell's Eyes Took on a Far-Away Reminiscent Look of Satisfaction.

"In about an hour I'm ridin' into Concho. Want to go along?"

"Sure do." The cowboy got to his feet with one lithe twist of his body. The two men saddled and dropped down out of the hills. As they rode Quantrell unexpectedly began to talk about himself.

He blamed the law for starting him on his troublous career. From his infancy he had fought his own way in the world. His father he had never known and he had lost his mother when he was seven. At the age of eleven he had been arrested for breaking into a store and stealing a gun.

"Didn't have a thing to do with it. Wasn't anywhere near there when it took place. But the kid who did it got scared an' traded me the gun. The marshal found I had it an' the prosecutin' attorney wished the burglary on me right off. Why not? I was only a kid an' had no parents who could vote. So he aimed to send me to a reform school. Got me in his office an' tried to bully me into sayin' I did it. Grabbed me an' shook me. I cut him with my pocketknife an' lit out leavin' him yelpin' for help."

"Two years ago I met that fellow in a saloon in El Paso, an' I went right up to him an' asked him if he remembered me. Didn't know me, of course. Didn't want to. I was only a kid cowboy who had drifted to town out the barranca. So I kinda reminded him."

Quantrell's eyes took on a far-away reminiscent look of satisfaction. He relapsed into silence.

RER CROSS ROLL CALL

Again the American Red Cross is in the midst of its annual roll call, which is made each year between Armistice Day and Thanksgiving. It deserves the support of everyone who can possibly contribute.

Communities which have happily escaped disaster can hardly appreciate the magnificent work of this foremost relief organization. A great fire, flood, storm, epidemic or other cause of widespread distress immediately brings the Red Cross into effective action.

When the need for aid arises the Red Cross responds unfailingly, efficiently, and promptly. There are no delays, no hesitancy, no lost motion. With clock-like precision the trained personnel moves to its humanitarian task and sticks to it until it is finished.

While it was originally designed for the relief of suffering in time of war, the Red Cross has in late years become the greatest agency for emergency relief in time of peace as well.

It costs only a dollar to join the organization and thus become identified with its noble work. To do this is at once a duty, a privilege and an honor.

The way of the transgressor has to be hard in order to stand the traffic.

A good many drink it who neither sell nor buy.

FREEDOM OF THE PRESS

Another attempted encroachment upon the freedom of the press is seen in a reported request of the Federal Farm Board for action against a Nebraska weekly newspaper which has dared to criticize the workings of that body.

According to a dispatch to the New York Times, the board has asked the Federal Trade Commission and the Post Office Department to investigate the offending editor.

Regardless of the merits of the newspaper's criticism, it seems that the marshalling of these formidable government forces against a little country weekly is a rather ridiculous proceeding.

It is generally recognized that the Farm Board has a difficult task, and by many it is believed that it has been assigned an impossible one. But the board is a public body, and as such should be subject to such comment, favorable or unfavorable, as every citizen has a right to make with respect to other public bodies and public officials, not excepting Congress and the President of the United States.

The fact that the board has seen fit to try to set up such a censorship as the dispatch mentioned refers to will be taken by many as rather strong evidence that Chairman Legge and his associates are not sure of themselves. In any event it indicates that they are too emotional to handle their important job with calm assurance.

SCHOOL STANDARDS

It's a far cry from the days when Abraham Lincoln applied himself studiously to the task of self-education in a little log cabin, by candle light, with the poorest facilities imaginable as his only encouragement, to the present up-to-date, progressive, all comprehensive school advantages offered the grade and high school students of Daly City.

And yet, with such rapidly moving times and such pyramiding advancements, are we keeping step and giving our students the best, or do we get across some big improvements and then forget to keep abreast, and console ourselves with the conscience-salving thought that "it's better than it used to be, and better than so and so's and so and so's," instead of basing our comparison on the standard and keeping up with the BEST?

Our school standards are the last features of our community life on which we dare compromise, or on which we CARE to compromise.

We would not trade the "old-fashioned" wife and mother for the moment, for a specially trained domestic science graduate, with all the knowledge of dietetics (and yet would we turn our backs on the advantages of such training for our daughters and sweethearts, considering the large percentage of "dyspeptic indisposition" our druggists can tell us of?).

We would not compare the sturdy rough-hewn pioneer type of husband and father for one moment, with the "specialist-graduate" in civil engineering, chemistry, professional and other specialized vocations, and yet, in this age of ever increasing competition, would we refuse the advantages of the best that is offered to fit the students of Daly City to meet this competition?

School standards, our school standards, standing alone, might not make us one community in ten—but neglect of them might be a deciding factor.

Each generation of Daly City must reach beyond the present generation. It is the history of progress. Let's give them the BEST we can command not only for THEIR sake, but for the sake of Daly City.

A CALL FOR AID

With an estimated five million persons threatened with idleness this winter, and approximately twenty million likely to need aid during the cold weather, the co-operation of every citizen and civic organization is going to be necessary to cope with the nation-wide suffering arising through unemployment.

The National Emergency Committee for Employment appointed by President Hoover is promoting an extensive campaign to alleviate the situation. Units are being organized in every community to meet local problems. The appeal for aid has been sent forth to all. The replies have been fairly numerous. Large industries have promised to employ as much labor as possible. One small loan corporation has made available a special fund of $100,000 to local welfare bodies in over 200 cities of the country for the purpose of helping as many families as possible. This is to be distributed in amounts of $10 to $50 per family to be paid back in small monthly payment, without interest or charges, when the breadwinner of the family finds employment. Individuals have made contributions to various funds. Yet the response has not been sufficient to meet the need.

To a person who has always been fortunate enough to have an income that assured a home and plenty to eat, the realization of what it means to be without these does not come very easily. Some day in the near future take a little time off and visit a mission or municipal lodging house where those without the price of a meal or bed seek their food and lodging. Watch that group of men as they line up and file by to receive their portion of food; see how eagerly they grasp the bread and bowl of stew; with what difficulty they restrain their hunger and wait their turn. One glimpse of those tired, hungry faces, stamped with a mixture of misery and hope, longing and despair, will stimulate anyone possessed with a spark of humanity with the desire to do something to lessen the number of those in that unfortunate position.

The call to aid those that are poor and cannot find work is one that no citizen can well ignore. H.

A BELATED HONOR

At last Major "Eddie" Rickenbacker has received from the hands of President Hoover the coveted Congressional Medal of Honor, twelve years after he earned it as America's ace of aces during the World War.

Few men, indeed, have experienced as many thrills as came to "Eddie" Rickenbacker in the years preceding and during the war. While in his early twenties he became widely known as a daring and skillful automobile racer. In fact, he went to France with Pershing as a member of the motor car staff. But aviation lured him, and in August, 1917, he was transferred to the Air Service at his own request.

He became commander of the 94th Aero Pursuit Squadron, the first American aviation unit to fight on the Western front, as well as the one scoring the greatest number of victories, sixty-nine, of which twenty-six were credited to Rickenbacker himself.

He was also the first commanding officer to lead his own squadron into Coblenz, Germany, and at the close of the war he was retired with the rank of Major. He was subsequently decorated with the Distinguished Service Cross with nine palms, the French Legion of Honor and Croix du Guerre (Cross of War) with four palms.

After the war he organized an automobile manufacturing company and is now vice-president and director of sales of the Fokker aircraft branch of General Motors. He is also president of the famed Indianapolis Speedway corporation and chairman of the contest board of the American Automobile Association.

Just turned 40, Eddie Rickenbacker doubtless has many years of useful and patriotic service before him. His legion of admiring friends are glad his valorous exploits during the war have been fully recognized at last by the bestowal of the Congressional Medal of Honor.

SCOUTS GO NUTTING

Heaps of hickory nuts and walnuts are being gathered by Boy Scouts this fall for planting as a part of the national nut tree project of the American Forestry Association.

For sentimental reasons most of the nuts are being gathered from historic grounds, including the former homes of Washington at Mount Vernon, Jefferson at Monticello, Lee at Arlington, and places associated with other great national characters, also from the Gettysburg battlefield.

The nuts will be forwarded to Washington, where the Department of Agriculture will plant them in nursery beds and later send the seedlings to be set out by Scouts all over the country. It is planned to plant five million nut trees within a five-year period.

This is a most worthy and patriotic reforestation project, and one which should have every encouragement and support.

National defense advocates believe that preparations are less expensive than reparations.

WELL KNOWN FAMILIES UNITED BY MARRIAGE

On Wednesday, November 12, Our Lady of the Pillar Catholic church at Half Moon Bay was the scene of a quiet wedding, when Miss Isabelle Bettencourt, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John A. Bettencourt, was united in marriage to Mr. Edwin C. Ver Linden, of Colma.

At 11 o'clock, to the strains of "O, Promise Me," Miss Fabian Ver Linden, sister of the groom, led the bride, while the bride followed on the arm of her eldest brother, Manuel J. Bettencourt. The church was tastefully decorated in huge yellow chrysanthemums and asparagus fern. Bride and bridesmaid were smartly dressed in vogue suits and carried beautiful bouquets of lilies of the valley and gardenias, with white ribbon streamers. The choir, composed of Mesdames Helen Radabaugh, Irene Bettencourt and Jewel Shields, sang "I Love You Truly," by Carrie Jacobs Bond. Joseph W. Bettencourt was best man. The ceremony was performed by the Reverend Father Bergen. Relatives assembled at the Bettencourt residence, where a reception was held after the ceremony.

Mr. and Mrs. Ver Linden motored south on their honeymoon and are now at their beautiful home on Annie and Washington streets. Congratulations and best wishes are extended to the young couple by their many friends throughout San Mateo county.

COST OF CRIME EXCEEDS CHILD WELFARE EXPENSE

The annual crime bill in the United States is in excess of sixteen billion dollars, compared with a five billion dollar child welfare bill, the committee on youth outside the home and school declares in a report to the White House Conference on Child Health and Protection.

While expenditures for welfare touch 50,000,000 young people, those on account of crime touch less than 1,000,000 of the population.

In spite of the huge crime and the criticism of youth, according to information made available at the conference offices at the Department of the Interior the committee found youth to be "cleaner, finer, steadier of purpose, and sturdier of character than any generation we have known."

The committee found the home to be "our greatest character influence." Attention is called to one divorce in every six homes and the havoc wrought by desertion and death.

To combat the influences of disintegration which foster delinquency and other evils, the committee calls for wider support of the basic institutions of home and church and school and those social agencies operating outside the home and seeking to influence character developments.

FEATHER RIVER ROAD OPENS NOVEMBER 28

The Feather River highway bridge near Oroville, in Butte county, the terminus of the first unit of the Feather River highway, will be officially opened and dedicated on Friday, November 28, it is announced. Governor C. C. Young, assisted by the incoming governor of the state, Mayor James Rolph, and the governor of the state of Nevada, will officiate. Special trains will run from Oroville to the bridge for the event.

The Feather River highway will provide a new national route through the Sierras, following the trail broken by thousands of gold seekers in 1849-1850. The new highway passes through Oroville to connect with the Pacific highway. The festivities attending the dedication will take place in Oroville.

Oroville celebrates at the same time her forty-fourth annual Orange and Olive Fiesta and Exposition, the Mardi Gras of Northern California, from November 26 to 30. The picturesque old northern city, center of the gold rush of '49 and now center of an important citrus growing district, will put on gala attire for Thanksgiving week. The Fiesta celebrates the completion of orange picking which occurs at Thanksgiving, and Butte county marks the occasion as Homecoming Week. The exposition is devoted entirely to orange, olive and other sub-tropical products, including avocados, jujubes, fejoas, etc. Commercial features are excluded, except those directly related to fruit culture. The exposition building is given up to a pageant and ball each evening during the week of the fiesta.

A NEW "KING OF KINGS"

One of the most gorgeous coronation ceremonies of recent years took place at Addis Ababa, capital of Abyssinia, early this month, when Ras Tafari and his wife were crowned emperor and empress. Their crowns, of gold and precious stones, cost a million dollars.

The full title of the new ruler is as extravagant as was the ceremony with which he assumed it. He is called "Emperor of Abyssinia, Lion of Judah, and King of Kings." His family claims direct descent from King Solomon and the Queen of Sheba.

Be it as it may, this 39-year-old emperor cuts quite a swath in Africa, and most of the nations of the world sent representatives to his coronation. King George V sent a cake weighing nearly a ton.

Abyssinia, or Ethiopia, is in the northeastern part of Africa, and has an area of about 350,000 square miles, with a population estimated at ten million. Ethnologists are not agreed with respect to the racial classification of the people, some asserting that they have an admixture of negro blood, others that they have not. Their religion is Christianity of the Coptic sect, and the people are generally illiterate, education being reserved for the clergy. Abyssinia was the only country in Africa to remain neutral during the World war.

The new "king of kings" is on his throne and all is well in Abyssinia—unless the rulers have induced indignation through partaking too liberally of King George's monster cake.

Not a hair-raising but a hair-splitting story is this one, related by the news magazine Time: A motion picture theatre is built on the line between Orange and East Orange, New Jersey. Orange permits Sunday movies; East Orange does not. On Sundays the seats on the East Orange side of the theatre are roped off and only those on the Orange side are sold.

RELIEF FROM CURSE OF CONSTIPATION

A Battle Creek physician says, "Constipation is responsible for more misery than any other cause." But immediate relief has been found. A tablet called Rexall Orderlies has been discovered. This tablet attracts water from the system into the lazy, dry, evacuating bowel called the colon. The water loosens the dry food waste and causes a gentle, thorough, natural movement without forming a habit or even increasing the dose.

Stop suffering from constipation. Chew a Rexall Orderlie at night. Next day bright. Get 24 for 25c today at the nearest Rexall Drug Store. Edwards' Drug Store, Mission street, near San Jose avenue.

School Standards

The average American community that is self-respecting will want to be STANDARD IN ITS SCHOOLS first and foremost!

These standards are widely accepted.

The FOUR basic standards are:

SCHOOL ATTENDANCE
NUMBER OF PUPILS TO A TEACHER
SCHOOL PROPERTY PER ATTENDING CHILD
TEACHERS' SALARIES

Specifically these standards are as follows: (every parent should be familiar with these standards)

1. The high school enrollment should be ONE-FIFTH of the total school census population.
2. Eighty-five per cent of the teachers in the grades should have at least six years' training since completing the grades; seventy-five per cent of the high school teachers should have eight years of training.
3. The average class in grade school should not be more than 30—and in high school, 45.

4. Fifty per cent of the young people (15-18) should be in high school.

5. Seventy-five per cent of all the children of school age (5-18) should be enrolled in and attending grade or high school.

6. As many boys as girls should go on to high school.

7. School buildings should be adequately lighted, heated and ventilated—equipped with sanitary conveniences.

8. There should be no part-time attendance owing to overcrowding.

9. Up-to-date schools require equipped playgrounds; a gymnasium in every school; an auditorium for school and community events; medical inspection; provision for musical, dramatic, manual, commercial and domestic science training; athletic training and competition; a branch library.

10. $200.00 worth of school property and equipment should be devoted to every attending child and at least $100.00 per child spent for the annual maintenance of the schools.

The better our school standards—the better our schools—the better educated our children. Our school slogan can justly be "Better than most; as good as the best."

School standards are good for comparative reasons; but, as in all other community enterprises, concerted interest and action is required.

NEW LICENSE PLATES ISSUED IN DECEMBER

Applications by mail for 1931 motor vehicle license plates will be accepted on and after December 1, Frank G. Snook, chief of the Division of Motor Vehicles, announced last Wednesday.

Upon that date, Snook said, the machinery of the division will be perfected to receive the applications and fees of the more than two million California motorists who must have new plates on their vehicles before January 15.

Applications should be mailed directly to the division's main office at Sacramento.

Counter delivery of plates will begin on December 15.

Snook advises motorists of the state to use the mail order method, as this is simpler, easier, and avoids the necessity of a special trip and standing in line.

The procedure to obtain new plates by mail is to enclose the white certificate of registration and the fee in an envelope and mail both to Sacramento. No other application is required.

If the applicant has moved during the year, the new address should be written in legibly on the face of the certificate, as the plates are mailed to the address appearing thereon.

Certified checks, money orders and bank drafts will be accepted in payment of the license fee. Currency should not be sent.

The fee for renewal of all pleasure cars and others weighing less than 3,000 pounds is $3. The single exception is electric cars, which pay a fee of $13.

Commercial cars such as trucks, etc., pay the regular fee of $3 and a graduated fee in addition, depending upon the weight. These fees are exactly the same as last year.

If the certificate of registration has been lost, the motorist should make application immediately for a new one, remitting the legal fee of fifty cents.

If the motorist has completed payments on the car during the year and has received the certificate of ownership, he should send both the certificate of registration and certificate of ownership and $1 extra for release of legal ownership. A new certificate of ownership will then be mailed the legal owner.

Snook urges motorists to lose no time in filing applications, inasmuch as it will be illegal to drive a car within a short time unless evidence can be shown that the motorist has applied for new plates.

Plates for 1931 are exactly the same as this year except that the colors are reversed, orange lettering being on a black background. Dashes between letters and numerals will be eliminated. The size and shape are unchanged.

"THE APPLE CART" COMING TO THE GEARY THEATRE

For those who admire the keen wit and brilliant satire of George Bernard Shaw there is a rich feast in store in the presentation of the latest product of his pen, "The Apple Cart," which will take place next Monday night, November 24, at the Geary Theatre, San Francisco. "The Apple Cart" is Shaw at his best. Although written in his seventy-fourth year, it is as bright as anything he wrote in his younger days. Shaw never grows old. His mind is ever youthful and vigorous.

"The Apple Cart" is at present playing to capacity houses in Los Angeles. It has delighted vast crowds in London, Berlin, New York, Chicago and other large cities, where it has been hailed, by the critics as the most brilliant of Shaw's works.

The action of the play takes place thirty years hence, in 1960. It tells of the struggles of King Magnus, of England, to preserve actual democracy in his nation by overthrowing the democratic forms of government controlled by "big business." In the process he is opposed by his cabinet, all but two of whom are tools of the plutocrats, and the struggle between the two opposing factions make up the balance of the play. And yet there is infinitely more to it than this. There is the keen interplay of brilliant minds and the scintillating mind of Shaw himself, hovering over all like a benign prophet. Even the long passages of argument between the king and his councillors become brilliant and exciting because of the constantly witty dialogue and the intrinsically exciting character of the ideas themselves. There is as much drama in the speech of King Magnus as there is an act of an ordinary play.

A cast of artists who have been specially trained in presenting plays of Shaw, will present the play at the Geary Theatre. Among them are Alan Mowbray, Doris Lloyd, Chappell Dossett and other distinguished players.

Maxine Miller, 18, of Tulsa, Okla., who weighs only 91 pounds, can handle a big airplane with ease and is said to be the smallest pilot in the southwest, if not in the nation.

It is said that fasting for fifteen days will restore one's "basic metabolic rate." Try it, if you care for that sort of thing.

HISTORIC SPOTS WILL BE MARKED

Historic points in San Mateo county are to be located and marked under a plan of the California State Chamber of Commerce, according to a communication from that organization to Manager Roscoe D. Wyatt, of the San Mateo county Chamber of Commerce, asking him to head a local committee to be formed to study the situation and report the names and locations of places considered important and of historical interest.

The letter says in part, "As you very well know, California's history is perhaps second to no other state in the Union and yet, in many ways, we have failed to capitalize on this very valuable asset."

"We have been studying this matter for some time past and have at last determined on a plan which we feel is absolutely sound, and will result in a greater knowledge of California's history and at the same time bring to the individual communities an increase in travel and, therefore, an added source of income not now being experienced."

"The plan which we have developed contemplates the placing of diversion markers along the various roads and highways directing travel to the principal points of historical interest. The first step in this plan, of course, is the development of a complete list of the major historical locations in every county, and just as soon as this list is completed for the entire state, then undertake the second step in the program; namely, enlisting some agency to erect diversion markers."

Manager Wyatt has already collected data on the locations of the various camping places of the Portola Expedition of 1769—the Broderick-Terry dueling place—the Hospice or Halfway House built in 1778 near Mills Hospital—the sighting of Pillar Point by Captain Francisco de Gali in 1585—Woodside Store, built in 1854—and other points and will welcome any authentic information which should be considered by the Committee. He will be particularly pleased to have accurate information as to the discovery and naming of Punta Año Nuevo—New Year's Point—the southwestern extremity of the county.

That a complete list of major historical locations may be had Mr. Wyatt requests that suggestions be sent to him at Box 148, Redwood City.

THE "FIRE TAX"

Our five hundred million dollar annual fire loss is, in effect, a tax that must be paid by every citizen, whether or not his own property is destroyed.

Every time we buy a loaf of bread, a pair of shoes, or any other commodity or service, some part of the purchase price is attributable to waste due to fire. Store owners pay, as a part of their overhead, insurance premiums which must be passed on to the customer. The insurance premium rate in any locality is a direct reflection of the fire hazard.

Every time a home or a factory is burned, the community loses a taxpayer. The tax which would be normally paid on this property must be distributed among other property owners. Every fire, large or small, means a loss of business and a cessation in employment—factors which directly affect every citizen. Cases are on record where great conflagrations have definitely brought to an end industrial and social progress in a town.

Preventing fire waste is a direct responsibility of the individual citizen. His carelessness causes it—his care can prevent it. By the exercise of common-sense in regard to our property we can lower the "fire tax."

DOUBLING ROAD FUNDS

It is said that a bill will be introduced in the next session of Congress to double the existing appropriation for road work. If the bill passes, $350,000,000 will be available for federal aid.

The unemployment situation and the mid-western drought have stimulated the good roads movement. The construction of roads gives employment to thousands of farmers and others who at present have little or no source of livelihood, at the same time providing the nation with an invaluable asset. Long after the present "depression year" is forgotten the roads will remain, paying dividends in the form of fast, year-round transportation, increased tourist travel, business for small town merchants, and lower motor vehicle operating costs.

The United States is fairly well supplied with main highways, but in large agricultural areas roads are almost the same as the horse-and-wagon days. Mud, slush and snow are still barriers between the farmer and the outside world.

Agricultural areas are entitled to good roads. States should follow the lead of the federal government and encourage by every practical method the construction of year round, farm-to-market roads.

It is written that the meek shall inherit the earth, but that's the only way they'll ever get it.

HIGHWAY COURTESY PAYS BIG DIVIDENDS

Nowhere is courtesy—or lack of it—more obvious than on the public highway. And nowhere does courtesy pay larger dividends than on the road. For carelessness—another name for lack of courtesy—causes more accidents of the road than any other specific thing, states the touring department of the National Automobile Club.

In this day of speed on the open road, the right of one vehicle to pass another going at a slower rate of speed is conceded, providing the proper signals are given. But courtesy demands that the passing car shall not cut in front of the passed one too quickly. Side-swipes are not uncommon as a result of cutting in too soon, and an overtaken car with maimed occupants is too great a price to pay for lack of courtesy. On gravelled roads there is a great tendency, when a car is traveling at a high rate of speed, to kick loose gravel. In such instances, where the passing auto turns back into the right hand track too quickly, pieces of gravel frequently crash through the windshield of the passed car with consequent injury to innocent people.

The middle-of-the-road driver has no excuse for hogging the center, except for lack of courtesy. Particularly on mountain road curves is the center-hog a menace to law-abiding motorists, for often there is insufficient time for the approaching cars to swerve enough to avoid collision—or else the innocent driver is forced into the ditch or over the side. Fifteen miles per hour and "keep to the right" will eliminate 90 per cent of the accidents on winding mountain roads.

Approaching hill-tops is another excellent place to observe the rules of the road. Keep to the right—do not attempt to pass another car when your vision is obstructed by a hilltop. Courtesy on narrow mountain trails is most essential. Watch the road ahead and where it is evident that a passing can not be made without the use of a turn-out, do not try to beat the other fellow to it, but drive into the first available wide place and await his coming. He will appreciate it and doubtless will be influenced by your considerate action to do the same thing when he meets another car.

Let the chap behind you know what you intend to do. The signals of the road are now so well known that the only reason for not using them is merely absence of courtesy. When slowing down, when turning to the right or left, show consideration to the driver behind you by use of the common signals of the road. This will avoid collisions and accidents in many instances; and more than that, it will leave a feeling of warmth in the heart of the individual who has been extended your consideration.

This sounds like preaching—but it isn't—it is just "good sense." Prevention of accidents, injuries and deaths is not a sign of weakness—but of strength and humanity. Carelessness—lack of consideration—are contributing causes to all this. Courtesy—thoughtfulness—will eliminate much of it. Think it over.

Another paradox is that an angle-worm is all curves and no angles.

IN HOME AND INDUSTRY

Gas, along with electricity and water, has become one of the services vital to modern home life. Up to recent years, it was used almost solely for cooking. But now gas heating and cooling systems, as well as gas refrigerators, are giving the home owner new standards of convenience, cleanliness, efficiency, economy and comfort. Gas has long been the pre-eminent industrial fuel. Now it is taking a foremost place in the home.

Out of 102 occupations listed by the American Research foundation as engaging wage-earners in the United States, 52 contribute freely or indirectly to making women beautiful.

UNUSUAL PROGRAM AT CALVARY CHAPEL

An unusual day's being planned at Calvary Baptist Chapel, 5724 Mission street, for next Sunday. It will be a day full of variety and information. The morning sermon by the pastor will be "When God Calls a Man to His Life Work." At the 9:45 Sunday school hour the film "At the Wailing Wall" will be shown. It deals with the Valley of Jehosephat. The walls of Jerusalem; the Moslem Mosque of Omar standing on the holiest site of Israel; the wall where daily the pious come to bewail Israel's woes and mourn for its departed glory.

The film for the 6:30 hour is one that each adult and child of Daly City should see. It is titled "The Dawn of Christianity." The film is in two reels, illustrating the birth of Christ; His ministry, which is illustrated by the Sermon on the Mount; and the immediate events leading up to and including His crucifixion.

The evening church service will carry the general theme of Thanksgiving. Miss Madie Irons, director of music of the Chapel, has prepared a musical program for the occasion. Miss Olga Marie Gromer, student of the University of California, will offer a vocal number at the morning and evening service. The sermon for the evening will be "Five Grains of Corn."

PRESBYTERIAN LADIES PLAN ANNUAL BAZAAR

Grace Presbyterian church will have their annual bazaar on December 4-5. A musical pageant is being arranged for the event. It is believed that Gene Brown, well known tenor, will be on the program that night, but at present it is uncertain whether this fine singer will be available. Other fine talent will be on the program.

The old joke about doing Christmas shopping early is being revived.
